

*Pathways to Research Impact Course: A brief
overview*

Violence against women and violence against children are some of the most pressing public health and human rights challenges of our time.

There is an urgent need to maximise the impact research can make

There is a gap between what we know works, and what is being done

Course objective

To equip researchers and practitioner researchers to take steps to maximise the impact of the research they do.

What will you learn about?

Leading and influencing change as a researcher/practitioner

Evidence eco-system and research impact

Working with the right stakeholders and collaborators in your context

Monitoring and evaluating your impact

Practical strategies and skills to support you to take the next steps along the pathway to research impact

Who is this course for?

Researchers / Practitioners whose work seeks to understand, address or prevent violence against women or violence against children in low- and middle-income countries

Any stage of career

Any context, e.g. universities, research institutes, NGOs

About the course

Four Core Modules

Research Uptake, Use and Impact Planning Tool

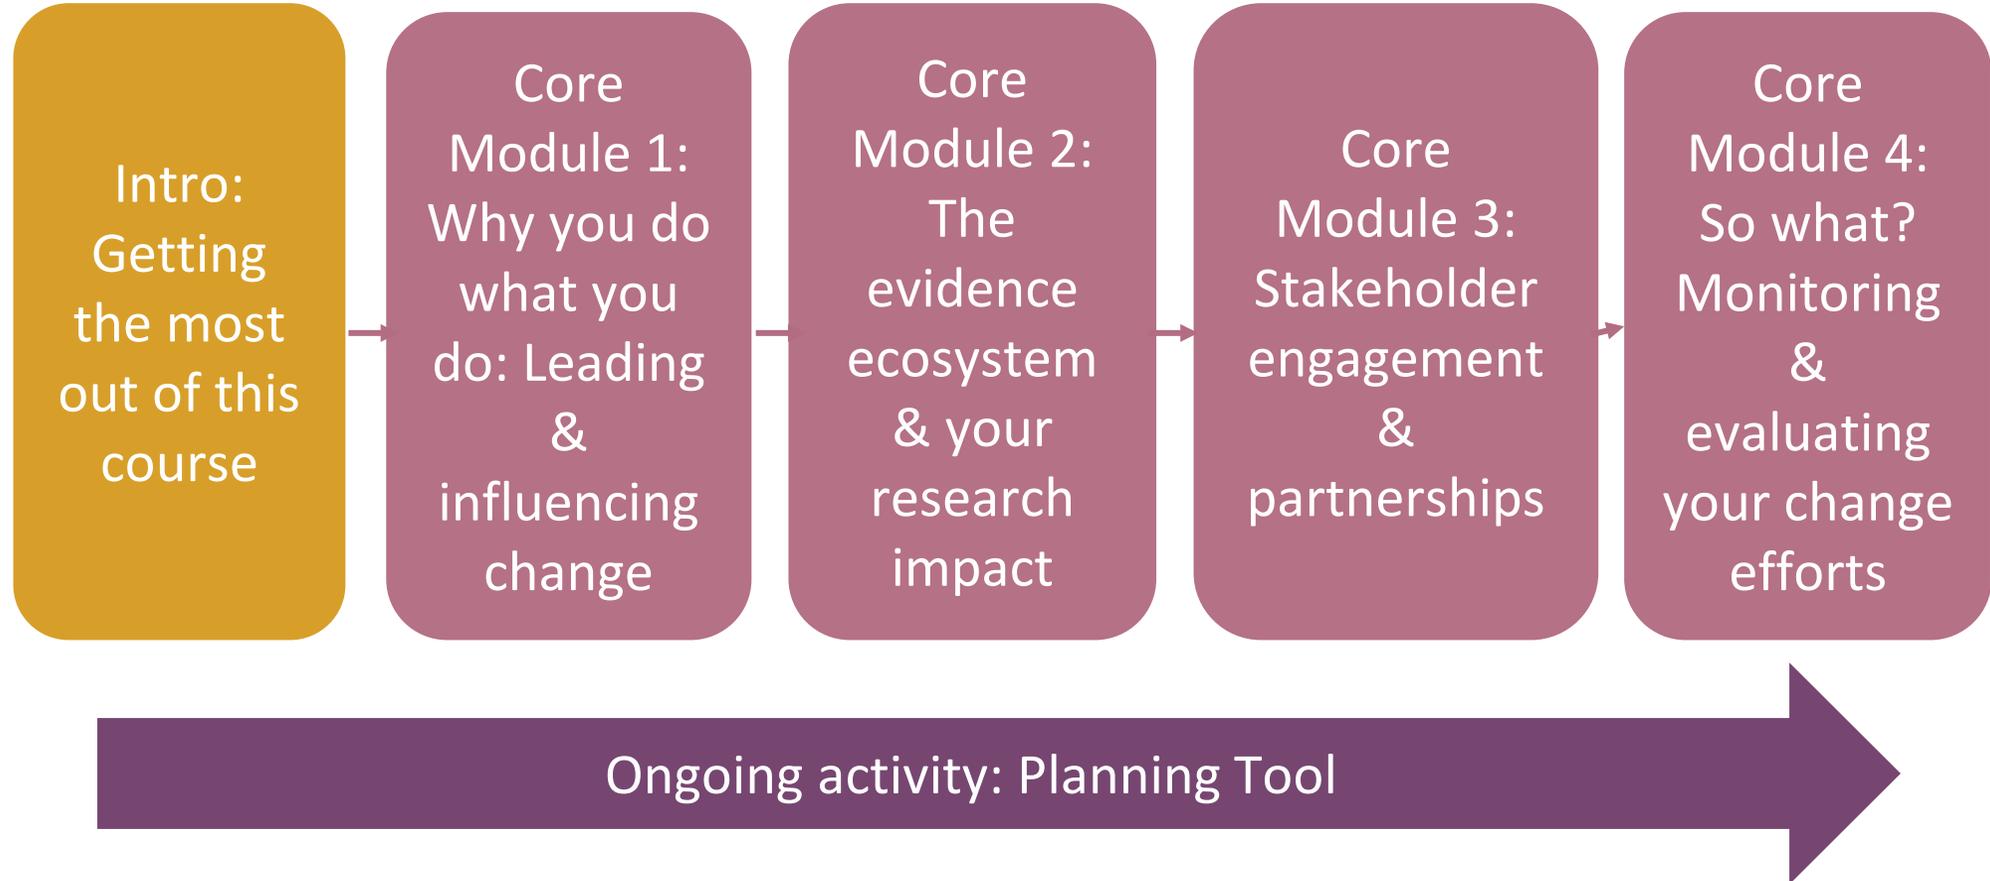

20 hour commitment

Self-paced, recommended to complete the course within 8 weeks

Options for networking with other course participants

Overview of course structure

To join the 'SVRI Pathways to Research Impact Course' visit
Online Courses | Sexual Violence Research Initiative \(svri.org\)
<https://svri.org/documents/online-courses>

